

Robin Johannsen
Soprano

'Parnasso in festa' Pentatone, Andrea Marcon conductor

Robin Johannsen's assumption of this, the biggest female role [Clio], comes close to stealing the show. Hers is a lovely bright soprano, full of character, a voice that comes with a high level of technical accomplishments which include excellent diction and beautifully turned, agile ornaments that encompass several perfectly executed cadential trills.

Brian Robins, Opera Magazine, March 2018

Beethoven's "Leonore" on European tour with the Freiburger Barockorchester and René Jacobs

Robin Johannsen sang an impressive Marzelline with pristine musicality and appropriate pertness.

Jonathan Sutherland, Bachtrack.com, October 26, 2017

Robin Johannsen gave us a beguiling Marzelline, the voice seemingly floating on air through the hall, with a liquid legato matching the crystalline tone.

Operatraveller.com, October 29, 2017

Handel's "Il Parnasso in festa" conducted by Andrea Marcon in Het Concertgebouw, Amsterdam

The revelation was American soprano Robin Johannsen, superbly agile and fresh-sounding—but also expressive—in Clio's taxing music.

David Shengold, Opera News, "Il Parnasso in festa," February 2017

Amor vien dal destino ~ Staatsoper Berlin im Schillertheater

Robin Johannsen is responsible for some of the evening's most seductive and accomplished singing as unhappy sister Giuturna.

Shirley Apthorp, Financial Times, April 27, 2016

As both Venus and Giuturna, Robin Johannsen brought a luminous soprano and an at times instrumental quality to her arias, such as in the Act Two number "Turn the captain back to shore," in which she begs Turnus to turn back from the coast (Lavinia) to the shore (herself).

Rebecca Schmid, classicalvoiceamerica.com, April 28, 2016

In her twin roles of Venus and Giuturna, Robin Johannsen had more prominent numbers, through which she was able to display all the emotion and technique of her refined soprano. Giuturna, driven near-insane by her forbidden love for Turno, repeated three times her metaphorical helmsman's aria. Johannsen especially shone in Venus's prologue lament arias, in which, accompanied by oboe, she fears for the fate of her son, Aeneas.

Waltraut Anna Kautz, Bachtrack.com, "Love comes from fate," April 27, 2016

Die Entführung aus dem Serail conducted by René Jacobs with the Akademie für Alte Musik Berlin, (Harmonia Mundi) - October 2015

[Jacobs's] Entführung unfolds with potent theatrical energy. It aims to entertain, to bring the situations to continuously animated life...I found it an uninterrupted pleasure to listen to the aria singing of Robin Johannsen's bright-toned, intensely involved heroine.

Opera Magazine, February 2016

Johannsen, though, is a superb Konstanze, with impeccably expressive coloratura and a beautiful silvery tone reminiscent at times of Anneliese Rothenberger on Josef Krips's recording (EMI, 10/70).

Tim Ashley, Gramophone, October 2015

Robin Johannsen is the very excellent soprano who sings Konstanze...Johannsen copes with the formidable demands of the role of Konstanze extremely well.

Iain Burnside, BBC Radio 3, October 31, 2015

Robin Johannsen sings Konstanze, and her lovely, pristine voice is a pleasure to behold, with its impeccable tuning and precise trill.

Robert Levine, www.classicstoday.com, December 2015

Emma und Eginhard (Emma) ~ Staatsoper Berlin im Schillertheater (conducted by René Jacobs)

Of a solid cast, Robin Johannsen's Emma stands out for her easy purity and well-rounded musicality.

Shirley Apthorp, Financial Times, April 28, 2015

American soprano Robin Johannsen led the pack as Emma. Her elegant voice gently wafted over the Schiller Theater (hardly the best place to hear Baroque opera). With freshness and legato, she gave the evening's most fully defined performance, from her precise and measured coloratura to the warm notes of her lower range during the tender 'alphabet of love' that she sings with Eginhard.

A.J. Goldmann, Opera News, July 2015

"In dolce amore" ~ World premiere CD recording of Arias and Cantatas by Antonio Caldara with Alessandro De Marchi and Academia Montis Regalis

A pair of warbling recorders adorns Sabina's touching siciliano 'Numi, se giusti siete' from Adriano in Siria (1732), and Johannsen sings with limpid sweetness in Emilia's 'In dolce amore' from Scipione Africano (1735). There are judicious contrasts in dramatic situations and musical moods, such as the unjustly condemned Dircea's chromatically expressive 'Se tutti i mali miei' from Demofonte (1733) in comparison to the flirtatious comedy of Dorina's 'Una donna' from I disingannati (1729).

Academia Montis Regalis and Alessandro De Marchi accompany with robust directness or lighter delicacy as required, and Johannsen's versatile singing helps to reveal an enriching glimpse of Caldara's virtues.

David Vickers, Gramophone, September 2014